'Fleeting Reflections' – An Abstract Photography Exhibition in Greenwich, London

- 'Fleeting Reflections' is an exhibition of abstract building reflection photographs taken over the last four years at Canary Wharf in London by Mike Curry.
- Exhibition runs from 14th – 28th September 2017 at the Greenwich Gallery, Linear House, Peyton Place, London SE10 8RS. Admission free.
- Accompanying book 'Fleeting Reflections' published by Triplekite Publishing <https://www.triplekitebooks.com/new-products/> available from 14th September.

Mike Curry's abstract photos of building reflections at Canary Wharf offer an intriguing insight into the everyday things we pass without regard as commuters. Mike invites us to discover the beauty of the detail around us that generally goes unnoticed.

The striking colourful images may initially seem as if they are created in Photoshop, but every image in the exhibition and book is exactly as it appeared, you just needed to stop, take a breath and really look.

A selection of the photos from the exhibition and the accompanying book 'Fleeting Reflections' ISBN 978-0-9932589-7-8 published by noteworthy photography publisher Triplekite, whose books are sold in the Tate and available worldwide, gives us an expanded view of the series which is very much an on-going project.

A free talk on the works will take place at the Greenwich Gallery on Saturday 16th September at 2pm and all are welcome.

Mike has been a professional photographer for 35 years and is a Fellow of the British Institute of Professional Photography. He has had worked featured in the Sunday Times Magazine, Outdoor Photography magazine and has featured in the Landscape Photographer of the Year exhibitions in recent years.
